CHINESE TILES!

his people that he had striven to be a " manly man," and that he was a " manly fellow." This was said boastfully, and in such relation to the great trial as to render it certain that he relied upon the developments made in that as the evidence to sustain the assertion. But look at the most thoroughly scared man ever found in a question of guilt as concerns the main charge of Tilton, as we may, and concede, if we will, that adultery was not proven, it is manifest that in several instances during the progress of the scandal the conduct of Mr. Beecher failed to justify the boast that he was a manly fellow. Is the name of a new mode of printing, which Horrockses White Long Cloth, A and B 36 against Beecher seemed at first to the public. on being mked, was pushed upwards through the therein he failed to show true manliness; No manly fellow would have done thus. allowed himself to be controlled by a base passion is very like a plagiarism upon that of the singist. Tilton had an unsparing enemy of many years, who was relentless in her antipathies, and would pursue a culprit with the rod of justice and vengeance to the last extremity, if occasion seemed to justify. This enemy was Mrs. Beecher, who had denied Tilton the hospitality of her house, and had slammed the door of the shepherd in the came as a tale-bearer it struck Mr. Beecher with great force that he had a wife, who, by temperament, sympathy and long predisposition toward the straying one, was eminently calculated to give judicious advice in the premises, and, feeling that his own cordial relations with Tilton might cause his judgment to waver from the line of strict impartiality, he turned the case over to the tender mercies of that severely-just and rigid matron whom he knew would be as impartial as the hosts fighting against Uriah. A manly fellow would hardly treat a friend in that way if he desired to restore him to domestic happiness and duty. Mr. Beecher alleges that he saw this error afterward, and it caused his remorse. He repented so far, at least, that in the subsequent proceedings he took good care not to confide any more in Mrs. Beecher, and no more allowed her energetic and itching fingers to meddle in the posterior pies which were to be cooked and served in this banquet of scandal. But after the discovery of this Muniz's Yellow Metal Sheathing, and Compse tremendous error, and after suffering "all the character. For the simple reason that their might verify by going to the sick hed of Elizabeth, he went and obtained a written retraction. Now, in the higher arts of manifects, the true course would have been for Beecher to return to Tilton had committed in supposing that there had been any cause of offence of the nature stated in Elizas after all, the abject slave of brain, is a coarse, Tilton how sadly he had been barking up the wrong tree, and would have deprived Tilton of the chance to accuse him of clandestinely obtainit from the husband of the woman by whom it was executed. Having just made and repented the tremendous mistake of dealing with his friends, Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, by concealing from the former his transactions with the latter, and mind and a sound body should go together, we home, bides the document in his desk, keeps such as will invigorate and revivify them, not away from the hosband, and proposes to let the world wag as it will; thus repeating the error for which he had just suffered so intensely— failing again in the fine art of manliness which had been with him such an especial study. A little later and he fails again. He had come to regard Tilton as a maligned and unfortunate individual, capable, nevertheless, of the publist things They were on good terms and Beecher had no suspicion of foul play. One of Tilton's misfortunes was that Elizabeth distrusted his other things which caused Beecher to advise a separation. The way for Tilton to recover from this misfortune was to avoid the company of any and all women whose standing was in any degree called in question. Well, there were the freelovers of New York, Woodbull and Claffin, whose reputations and principles were very unsatisfactory to Plymouth church, and association with them Beecher knew to be damaging. He says he kept clear of them himself, and wrote only two notes to Victoria, very short and crusty-of a business nature, which were sort of forced from him. Knowing the suspicions of Elizabeth and the perils of Tilton, it would seem as though true manliness would have impelled him to take some steps to get his friend away from the association of these free-love women, but he never gave even an expostulation to saye him from this fatal road to ruin-not a single one either as pastor, friend,

And there was another failure in this: Tilton, 971 lim in spite of the letter of retraction which Beecher obtained from Elizabeth, still affected to think he had a cause of offence; forgiven, to be sure, but Stockholm Pitch not so far fogotten that he deemed it wise on the whole for Beecher to visit her, or even speak to her without the presence of her husband. This was the situation, and so acknowledged by Mr. The LADIES of the HAWAIIAN ISLANDS Beecher; yet, while the strict embargo was on, and Mrs. Beecher was off, there sprang up a little loving, bird-singing-in-the-heart correspondence, very warm and affectionate, and only "permitted" because Madame Beecher was away. This was not manly as respects Mrs. Beecher, and was a violation of the understanding with Tilton as to the relations which were to hold between Beecher and Mrs. Tilton. Had there been no understanding in the matter, the fact that Beecher knew she JUST RECEIVED! loved him, and that Tilton was jealous and desired absolute non-communication, should have operated on his manliness to prevent a clandestine love-letter correspondence of the nest-hiding. trailing-arbutus sort. And once more Beecher failed in manliness in his conduct toward Dr. Storrs. Storrs was Beecher's most intimate clerical brother and friend. He had "views" of duty which he frankly and publicly stated. Beecher did not meet these views on the square; he did not meet Storrs and reason with him, but cut him dead, and wrote a letter to the heathenish Moulton accusing the distinguished doctor and apostle of the basest motives, and pronouncing him worthy of damnation. This was not manly, and cannot be defended, even by church Which for superiority of workmunship WALL PAPER!

Another departure from true manliness was the case of Mrs. Moulton. Beecher had been to her bowed with grief, and she had administered consolation in the shape of a kiss, and he had received it in that form. As a gentleman his mouth was forever shut, and in honor he was bound to protect that woman from any consequences which might prejudice her from the transaction. But when she was on the stand he caused his lawyer to put the question and compel the confession of the kiss for the sole purpose of damaging her statement by making the jury believe she was not what a woman should be Having purchased the entire stock of carriage material from Dil- So intent was Beecher to secure his own safety from a lady who had kissed him a confession of the act under circumstances calculated to do ber an unjust injury.

In his general conduct concerning this case manliness is conspicuously wanting. Look at it! Mr. Beecher is traduced by a woman distrusted by the public. His case, as stated by himself, is: an unblemished character built up by forty years of pious endeavor; a certificate of denial from the woman implicated with him in the offence; the carnest co-operation of her husband in suppressing the story, as Beecher supposed at the time; the aid of the best friend God ever raised up to the same end; the influence of the FEW THOUSAND OF GOOD QUAL- most powerful church in the country in his be-A ITY, 16 x 16, will be sold cheap, by BOLLES 4 CO. balf: conscious innocence of the offence which Hamolaia, July 1, 1875, 1997 by was not a crime at the worst; power to make a statement that would bear the light of the judg ment-day; faith in a God who will not permit injustice to be done to his own chosen children; and that combination of circumstances which, as Mr. Evarts said, always harmonizes with the truth. This is Beecher's position as set forth in lis testimony and by his counsel. And yet he was afraid and skulked behind devices that were stultifying, sat on the "ragged edge," wished PUUNUI MILK RANCH! In one of his Friday lectures, Mr. Beecher told he were dead," dared not talk with the church on the matter, dared not trust the truth to be published by Tilton and Moulton-and he says they were affirming it then, though they say they

for instance: Bessie Turner and Mrs. Morse promises to prove highly useful when further went to Mr. Beecher with certain infamous experiment has more fully developed its capabilstories relating to the conduct of Tilton towards lities. As most people are awate, until recently his wife. Beecher was Tilton's pastor, mentor only one color could be printed at one operation, and friend. He was the one promising young and a map, picture, or ornamental poster had to man to whom he had given his especial confidence go through the press once for every color it was and instruction, and from whom he expected the to exhibit when finished. For some little time grandest and noblest things. He was on such past a process has been in use by which printing terms with him, had so weighed and estimated in two colors could be effected at one operation him, that on the face of it the stories must have. This was by having two blocks on the press at seemed to Beecher as impossible as the scandal the same time, one under the other; the latter, As his pastor it was his professional duty to block above, and an impression taken, when it inform Tilton of the tattle of these women and dropped back into its place again to be re-inked get his side of the story, and advise with him on far the next sheet. To illustrate its working, let us suppose that a map has to be printed by its means. Six or seven colors would suffice to define the boundaries of counties or electoral districts, and these would be produced in this way. A slab of ink of each of the colors to be used would be prepared, thick or thin according to the number of impressions required, and upon these the outlines of the counties would be traced. face of this lamb of the flock. The map is finished by passing each impression over a litho-graphic stone charged with black ink, to impart outlines, lettering, &c. The contrivance is as ingenious and simple as it promises to be extens-

The Inberal Review, in an article headed "The Athletic Craze," makes the following remarks: In the present day there are scores of young men who are induced by the example of others to completely neglect their mental natures in order that they may strengthen their legs and arms. It is not surprising that among them, as among those whom they imitate, a low and sensual tone prevails, and that they become incapable of appearing to advantage anywhere except in circles devoted to athletics and pleasures of a coarser tortures of the damned " on account of it, after | minds are not permitted to receive pabulum of a being informed by Tilton that he had a cause healthy character they are rendered incapable of of offence" against him, the truth of which he sustaining any intellectual conversation with comfort to themselves, and they are inclined to look with unmerited contempt upon those who are disposed to slight muscle, and have little of it FISH MARKET.
